

I can determine the Cause and Effects of westernization in Japan.

Primary Source Identify and Describe the source.	Explain how it depicts a Cause of westernization in Japan.	Explain how it depicts an Effect of westernization in Japan.	Sourcing (H-A-P-P-Why?)
1 It is a painting of Commodore Mathew Perry's war ship in Edo Harbor.	Mathew Perry's war ship was in front of Japan, and was forcing them to open up their ports. This created a series of consequences that led Japan to industrialize like Western Powers in order to avoid what happened in China.		The Historical Situation for this painting is when Commodore Mathew Perry went to Japan and was threatening them with his warship to open up their trading ports. This led to Japan's westernization and industrialization.
2 Portraits of Mathew Perry.		This is an effect of Westernization because as we are looking at the paintings from right to left the pictures are getting more and more westernized, going from a Japanese style of art and clothing to a western style of clothing and description.	The change in the Point of View of the artist is showing the effects of westernization. As art is being westernized, the paintings are becoming more western and almost more humanized, showing the acceptance of western ideas in Japan.
3 A picture shows a sumo wrestler winning against a foreigner.		It shows the effects of westernization because Sumo Wrestling is a Japanese sport, and it is being played with a foreigner, showing the mixing of Western and Japanese cultures.	Historical Situation of this picture is that as Japan was accepting Western ideas, Japan was also accepting more of Western culture, ideas, and people. This led to cultural syncretism and diffusion.
4. The picture is of a Japanese doctor and	This is a cause of westernization		The Point of view of a foreigner in Japan

his patient. The document shows western thoughts on Japanese medicinal practices.	because it shows how pressures from western foreigners led to westernization of many Japanese fields.		taking this picture puts the medical practices in a bad light. This puts added pressure on Japan to start the westernization process.
5 It is a letter from the Meiji Emperor to Ulysses S. Grant about the Iwakura Mission.	This is because Japan is trying to reach equality with a western power through reforms in treaties, leading to more westernization in Japan.		The point of view of Japan towards America's situation and culture shows America in a good light. This is what leads Japan to adopt many Western policies.
6 Photograph of the Meiji Emperor.		This is an effect of Westernization because cameras were invented in America, and this photograph was taken with a camera, showing the adoption of western ideas and innovations in Japan.	This historical situation of this photograph is showing how Japan adopted Western technology into their daily lives through westernization.
7. These are photographs of a Meiji Shrine and one of a state Shinto building.		This shows an effect of Westernization, as the native Japanese tried to preserve their own unique culture against western culture.	The purpose of these monuments were to preserve and acknowledge Japanese culture despite the acceptance of western culture.
8 An illustration of the Silk Reeling Machine being in use in Japan.		This shows an effect of Westernization as Japan started using a Western form of technology in a factory industry.	The historical situation of this painting is the Industrial Revolution in Western powers, and Japan using these new forms of industrial technologies and methods of industry.

9 A picture showing a Japanese prince learning about European metal casting methods.		This is an effect of the Westernization process of Japan because it shows how Japan adopted new and foreign innovations from the west.	The historical situation of this picture is that Japan was borrowing methods of innovation and technology from Western powers to further industrialize themselves and improve their nation.
10 A picture of Azuma bridge and a torpedo being fired at by Inoue Tankei.		This shows an effect of the Westernization process of Japan because the torpedo is a technological achievement borrowed from other western countries.	The point of view of the artist on the achievement is shown in their painting. Everyone in the painting is looking curious and a little excited to see the torpedo fired, showing Japan's eagerness for this innovation.
11 Two popular songs in the 1880s of Japan.	These songs are a cause of the westernization of Japan. That is because they are talking about being careful against western powers, which most likely pressured Japan to start industrializing their nation sooner.		The historical situation of this document is the imperialism of European nations. Europe was invading the economies of different countries and taking advantage of their people to better their own economies. This led to Japan borrowing from Europe and America to become equal to them.
12 A document talking about leaving the rest of the Asian countries behind and joining the Western powers.		This is an effect of the Westernization of Japan because as Japan became more industrialized and economically superior, this separated them from	The purpose of this document was to further show Japan's superiority over other Asian countries, and also to further the Westernization process by forgetting the rest of Asia.	Asia and joining the west.

13 Two pictures of women in customary clothing during that time in Japan.		This is an effect of Westernization since the clothing that the women are wearing are more western, showing the cultural borrowing that occurred.	The historical situation for this document is that as Japan was westernizing and industrializing itself, it borrowed parts of western culture and mixed it with their own culture.
14 Two pictures making fun of the westernization process in Japan.		This is an effect of the westernization of Japan because it shows the reaction of America to what's happening in Japan. The people are portrayed almost like animals in fancy clothing, showing how Japanese will always be inferior to Western people.	The purpose of these pictures is to make fun of Japan's westernization. Based on social darwinism and scientific racism, these pictures portray Japanese people as inferior animals trying to look fancy.
15 This is a picture of a bridge in Kyoto, Japan.	This is a cause of westernization because it is before major urbanization and industrialization. The lack of work and a mostly rural area was the motivation for westernization.		The historical situation for Japan in this period was mostly rural and less urbanized. This was different to western industrialization, which resulted in Japan's change to follow the West's lead. This led to more industrialization and urbanization in major cities like Kyoto.
16 A picture of a group of leaders representing Japan's attempted constitution.		This is an effect of westernization because they were borrowing from Western political structures and creating a	The purpose of this picture is to show the part of the Japanese government that is close to a democracy, and closer to a western form of constitution.	government.

17 An English newspaper picture of Japan's parliament.		This is an effect of Westernization because Japan borrowed from the British and created their own Parliament.	The point of view of an English newspaper influenced the way the picture was made to exactly reflect an English parliament, even though Japanese clothing and customs are different. This shows how the west thought that Japan was blatantly copying them.
18 A British cartoon making fun of Japan's westernization.		This is an effect because it shows how Britain reacted to Japan's development. They make fun of Japan's development by making Japan an infant.	The purpose of this picture is to make fun of Japan's development, and to make Britain seem superior to Japan. They portray Japan as a baby joining experienced generals, showing how behind Japan truly is compared to other western powers.
19 A cartoon showing the perceived threat of Japan's imperialism to Australia and New Zealand.		This was an effect of westernization because it makes fun of the idea that Japan would be an Imperial Power that could threaten Australia or New Zealand.	The point of view of the artist is shown in the cartoon. The only threat that actually happened to Asia, was that they were painted brown. This is a joke saying that that's all the damage Japan could in reality do. The artist is saying that there is no real danger.
20 A picture showing the alliance between Britain and Japan.		This is an effect of westernization. That's because Japan	The purpose of this document is to show how Japan is equal to became an equal to western powers like Britain through their industrialization and westernization process. This created an alliance although they were from different parts of the world.	Britain. It also shows that regardless that Japan is an Asian country, they are an equal power to any Western power.
